

TEMI

ABOUT TEMI

Growing up, Temi was taking dance classes and performing on stage from a young age which improved her stage presence and natural sensibility towards different music styles. In 2014, Temi started exploring Dancehall as a dance style as well as a music genre and developed a passion for Jamaican culture. Now Temi regularly travels to Kingston where she continues training as a Dancehall dancer, expanding her knowledge of Jamaica's music history and showcasing her DJ skills in various venues.

In her teenage years, Temi was travelling and working as a model which immersed her in the fashion world. It also provided her access to high-end nightclubs around the world, where she could not help but notice a lack of female DJs. After moving to London in 2017, Temi received a BA in Tourism and Events Management, as well as an MA in Music Business Management.

Her research focused on gender disparities in events and the entertainment/ music industries, as well as among DJs. To further explore her interest in gender imbalance amongst DJs and music business professionals, DJ Temi created a podcast called 'Females in the Mix', where she talks to women working in the music and entertainment industries about their experiences.
